Glymont School
(Williams Funeral Home)
Indian Head vic.
Private

circa 1922

Originally built as the Glymont School around 1922, this building has undergone several remodelings that were associated with its change in use. The 1-story frame building has a square footprint, a hipped roof, and a 3-bay-wide facade. Once characterized by banks of five adjacent windows on its east and west walls, the building has been altered to such an extent that it no longer resembles a school. The original window bays are the only remaining element that is reminiscent of its former use.

The Glymont School was in operation at this site for nearly sixty years. Originally established around 1882 in a one-room schoolhouse, the present structure replaced the first building around 1922 after the original school burned down. After about 1940, the school was consolidated with the one at Indian Head, and the building leased and then purchased by the local Lutheran congregation who occupied it for over thirty years. Its most recent use is as a funeral home.

Originally built as the Glymont School around 1922, this building has undergone several remodelings that were associated with its change in use. The 1-story frame building has a square footprint, a hipped roof, and a 3-bay-wide facade. Once characterized by banks of five adjacent windows on its east and west walls, the building has been altered to such an extent that it no longer resembles a school. The original window bays are the only remaining element that is reminiscent of its former use.

The 1.16-acre lot that the school occupies is characterized by a level grade, a large gravel parking area at the front, and a slope down at the rear. The building sits about two hundred feet north of Hawthorne Road near its intersection with Old Glymont Road. Planting beds adorn the front of the building.

The 3-bay facade features a centered entrance flanked by single window openings. The front gable portico that shelters the entrance features attenuated Tuscan columns set on concrete plinths and flared eaves. Capped by a fanlight, the double-leaf entry holds panel-and-light replacement wood doors, and is flanked on either side by pointed-arch window openings. Each opening contains fixed 6-light windows and is trimmed with square-edged wood casings.

The east and west flanks of the former schoolhouse retain evidence of banks of five original windows that would have provided light to the classrooms prior to the installation of electricity. These rows of windows are trimmed with square-edged wood casings and have been infilled with boards.

The original rear wall of the building has been obscured by a 1-bay-deep frame shed addition. The north wall of the addition is pierced by three casement windows, one with nine lights and the other two with four lights. A small side gable frame addition extends off the west side of the original building. This addition is pierced by a 6-light wood awning window on its west wall, and a 9-light awning window on its south side.

The original building has been altered several times. The exterior has been reclad in asbestos shingles, the roof recovered with asphalt shingles, and the side windows enclosed. The facade appears to have been remodeled circa 1942, when the Lutheran church took over the building. At that time the Gothic revival-style pointed arch windows were added and the door likely remodeled.

Two temporary trailers stand near the north and east sides of the building. Both are connected to the main building via decking and a canopy.

Today, the interior of the building is nearly unrecognizable as a church or a school. The funeral home that now occupies the space has redesigned the interior for its use, incorporating an office, chapel, and work rooms.

The Glymont School was in operation at this site for nearly sixty years. Originally established around 1882 in a one-room schoolhouse, the present structure replaced the first building around 1922 after the original school burned down. After about 1940, the school was consolidated with the one at Indian Head, and the building leased and then purchased by the local Lutheran congregation who occupied it for over thirty years. Its most recent use is as a funeral home.

The Board of County School Commissioners of Charles County purchased "The Glymont School Lot" from Benjamin D. & Sarah E. Tubman in 1882. Shortly thereafter, a primary school was established in a new one-room schoolhouse built there. The school was threatened with closure in 1898 because of its low enrollment and the proximity of the Indian Head school. However, the local school trustees, R.R. Knott, Hyland Brawner and John J. Gering were successful in soliciting several new students for the school and it remained open.¹

The Glymont School was expanded sometime early in the 20th century. A second room was added to house the fourth through seventh grade students. In 1922, both sections of the school burned down.² For a short time, the students were taught in two nearby abandoned stores, until the new schoolhouse was complete.³

This new structure had two classrooms and served for nearly twenty years before the Glymont School was consolidated with Indian Head around 1940. The land and school building were sold at public auction in 1945. For several years prior to the sale, the local Lutheran congregation, the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Our Savior, utilized the building for its services. They purchased the building in 1946 and remodeled it for use as a church. The

Lutherans occupied the building for over thirty years.⁴

The Lutherans sold the property to Kenneth L. Yates in 1979 for $50,000. In 1987, the building and lot was acquired by Paul Lagana and Charles W. Howard. The building currently houses Williams Funeral Home.

The village of Glymont grew up around the steamboat wharf established before the Civil War along the Potomac River just north of Indian Head Point. Prior to the war, mail was delivered by contract with the Washington & Fredericksburg Steamboat Company whose steamers stopped twice daily at Marbury Landing (the lower of the two Glymont wharves). From there, mail was carried by stage to Port Tobacco and to the various rural post offices.⁵ In addition, Glymont served as a center of trade where farm products were shipped out and manufactured goods brought into the county. In 1827, regular steamboat passenger service was instituted along the Potomac River, servicing Glymont and the many wharves along Charles County's shoreline.⁶ Steamboats, thus, became the main mode of transportation to the "outside world" for many Charles Countians until the 1930s.

By the mid-19th century, Glymont consisted of two landings, Marbury to the south and Pye's to the north. The town grew to incorporate at least one store, a hotel, and the post office. By 1878, the town's population had reached 75, making it the fifth largest village in Charles County at that time.⁷ One doctor, N. Chapman, served the town, and shortly after 1882, the Glymont school was established. During the late 19th and early 20th centuries, Glymont was the undisputed "hub" of water transportation in Charles County, appearing in more steamboat advertisements than any other wharf in the county.⁸
